Sorry, I intended to add a note to the email. The keyword is UNLIMITED in the headers and footers - this means the document has been cleared for open publication (so comes under the catch-all '...unless indicated, ...' in the restrictions on distribution). You can post it on the website and anyone is free to copy it - the copyright notice just means someone cannot copy it and pass it off as their work.

Clive,

Thanks for the swift accomplishment of these actions.

I see that the QinetiQ document is copyrighted and contains restrictions on distribution. Would you please send me a note that explicitly states the terms under which I may make the document available to the OWGV.

I would prefer to be allowed to post it to the website or provide a link on the website. Of course, anyone might chance upon it there.

My second choice would be to encrypt the document and post it on the website. I would distribute the key to OWGV.

My third choice would be to send it directly to OWGV members via email attachment. This has the disadvantage that future members may not get to see the document.

Please let me know. Thanks.

Regards, Jim

As promised in London, please find attached

- 1) Our C++ vulnerabilities report - i.e. all unspecified, implementation defined etc. behaviours extracted from the ISO standard and tabulated
- 2) An email from the MISRA C++ chairman conforming my appointment as liaison
- 3) The vulnerability classification scheme we used in (1)
